

You are the police and are going to pay a visit to John Robie,
(the famous Cat Burglar), at his chateau on the French Riviera.
Even though your story takes place in France, it's still a Hollywood movie.
Look for France in Hollywood.

Look for the lane whose name is the same as the place you seek.
Enter the arch whose name is the same as the place you seek.
There will be a fountain whose name is the same as the place you seek.
You should be at the place you seek.
Proceed slowly like a tortoise, rather than speedy like a hare.
As the late, great John Belushi once said,
"One last speedball for the road."

John Robie is released by the police for lack of evidence on a 10-day parole. He decides that the police are inept and that he is the only one who can prove his innocence. In doing so, he must scale great heights to catch the imposter thief. He travels up the long, winding road to the top of the hill. There, he finds the house to which he must climb. He then shimmies up the chimney to the roof, being careful not to dislodge any loose stones from the masonry structure. A misplaced piece of the chimney might expose the “Cat Burglar” and his secret would be revealed.
