

SECTION 03

Incoming transmission:

Once you have ventured to the other side of the miniature wormhole, collect your information and Blast off. Return to the original course at 50 degrees south and proceed 3.3 million miles. Your stellar charts may become quite useful at this point.

Remote sensors from earth detect a malfunction on a nearby satellite and you must rendezvous and initiate repairs at once. It is orbiting in a particularly turbulent area of space known as the solar zephyr and has left many space travelers in dizzying heights. Once you have entered the orbit around the satellite, right your space mobile at an incline and proceed with caution. It may seem puzzling, but keep your sensors highly tuned until you position your vehicle at the zenith. Look out for space vortexes that may send you spiraling outward away from your destination.

Once you have docked at the satellite, examine the large container for damage and extract any loose parts or debris that may have lodged on or near the machinery. Examine the object closely and determine whether or not it is vital to another operation. Having verified its function, return to your space mobile and make a thorough evaluation and proceed accordingly.

A choice must be made
On which way to go
Conservative fade
Continues the show

A 2 and an 8
Will lead you the way
A similar trait
You've traveled today

Not long will you run
In your space mobile
No time for big fun
Behind the big wheel

To starboard you search
For a harbor sign
Or caught in a lurch
If you veer from your line

And look for a star
Spelled out you will find
It's not very far
So keep that in mind

Now steer the right way
And look for a rock
It won't take all day
It won't take a clock

It's small and it's cute
And near a large stone
Stay keen and astute
For rodent alone

Take care what you find
It may not be yours
Be honest in mind
In all of your chores

Another star group
May orbit quite near
You're all in the loop
There's nothing to fear

When harbor you leave
Continue your path
Much yet to achieve
Before a hot bath

You've traveled some distance through time and through space
But still there's a long way to go
Your next leg is long and you've got to keep pace
And not be surpassed by your foe

Continue ahead and don't veer from your course
To a place where space will divide
And liquid will stream from below at the source
And that's where you'll park your space ride

At that point you'll stop then by foot you will go
To a place where you don't touch the ground
Two sides to this place, but neither you'll know
The middle is where you are bound

Search high and search low and spots in between
And try not to look like a fool
No mirrors exist but reflections are seen
Your bare hand is your only tool

Around you are aliens who may have distrust
Avoid if you can at all cost
Return to your space car and gather no rust
And take off without getting lost

Your journey is long
And your half way there
You've prayed for no wrong
And traveled with care

It's time for more fuel
In the space mobile tank
But don't lose your cool
If you're drawing a blank

Just follow the way
That heritage leads
To the vehicle bay
And accomplish your deeds

Walk in through the gate
Where ancients once dwelled
And search out your fate
Your minds they must meld

A pump you will seek
It's out in plain site
Around it you'll peek
No need for a light

And when it is found
You'll start seeing red
It stands on the ground
A crown on its head

Then once you are full
Return to your ride
No time for a lull
Blast off fast and wide
